

...for a Caring Community

A successful community comes together to care for its own and create a culture of achievement. Frederick Countians do this year round, but they become even more involved in their community during the holidays.

For opportunities to give back, consult the Community Foundation of Frederick County. The organization has just launched a six-month public awareness campaign that highlights the importance of philanthropy and the foundation's unique giving opportunities. Of special note this year is the new Frederick Giving Project Fund. Established recently to make philanthropy accessible to a new generation of donors, this component fund of the Community Foundation urges young professionals to donate both their money and their time. Contributions and volunteer efforts are designated for one small or emerging nonprofit each year. For more information, call 301-695-7660 and visit www.frederickgivingproject.org or www.cfredco.org.
